

Sources of Funding for Natural Science Collections

This list is a resource for people looking for funding for natural science collections and is not exhaustive. The funding bodies listed have not necessarily funded natural science collections or even museums before. If you have any comments/edits/experiences/improvements to add to this document then please let NatSCA know. Apologies for any repetitions.

The PRISM Fund (the Fund for the PReservation of Industrial and Scientific Material)

A major funder of scientific acquisitions and conservation projects.
Have funded new taxidermy in the past.

<http://www.mla.gov.uk/what/support/grants/PRISM>

The PRISM fund does not extend to Scotland. There try the National Fund for Acquisitions administered by the National Museum of Scotland although this does not cover conservation work.

The Curry Fund

exists to support a variety of causes:

- geological publications, including film, video and television productions
 - geological conservation, including the purchase, clearance and recording of sites
 - other initiatives approved by the Council, including awards to individuals
- and very limited assistance with travel costs for overseas visitors engaged in geological research
